STILL ANOTHER WEDDING.

Brilliant Marriage of a Rising Young Dentist to the Daughter of a Leading Tobaccoist.

One of the most elegant of the many fashionable weddings in the city this fall and winter was that of Dr. A. P. Campbell and Miss Johnnie L. Mills at the Baptist church, last Tuesday morning, at 10 o'clock. The affair was one of more than ordinary interest in the social circles and the church was filled with interested spectators, friends of the happy young couple, long before the appointed hour arrived.

There were four ushers who gracefully officiated in seating the crowd. These were Messrs. John E. Campbell and Ben U. Campbell, brother and cousin of the groom; Mr. Ira L. Smith and Mr. Duncan Galbreath. When the bride couple arrived the ushers formed in pairs and preceded them down the central aisle, while Miss Rosa Steinhagen played an appropriate and beautiful wedding march. The bride was attired in a handsome dark traveling dress of white the groom wore the conventional broad-cloth. They paused in front of the stand and in his usual solemn and impressive way, Rev. J. N. Prestidge said the words that united their young and loving hearts.

The newly married couple repaired at once to the depot to take the 10:18 train, but found it 50 minutes late. They remained at the depot receiving congratulations from and conversing with their friends until the delayed train arrived and then left for a trip to St. Louis, Chicago and other cities.

The groom is a young dentist who has just attained his majority and entered into the practice of his profession. He is a young gentleman of good and moral habits and is well equipped for the practice of the profession which his honored father, lately deceased, followed for so many years. The bride is the youngest daughter of Mr. John N. Mills, one of the leading warehousemen of this city. She is a young lady of beauty, culture, grace and many lovable traits of character. The happy couple have the earnest wishes of the KENTUCKIAN for a long life of uninterrupted felicity.

A SYRIA'S STORY.

Thrilling Narrative of a Terrible Massacre of Christians in Damascus.

A gentleman of medium height and slender build, with black hair and dark complexion, appeared before a small audience in the chapel of the Woodland Avenue Presbyterian Church not long ago. It was understood that he was to make a missionary address, but he surprised his hearers with something refreshingly different from the stereotyped missionary dissertation. As an example of conciseness and good English the effort should have been heard by many ministers. The speaker was Mr. Mulhanna E. Barakat, of Syria, now a student at Auburn Theological Seminary. He took as his text the words of God to Saul, and in the ninth chapter of Acts: "Saul! Saul! why persecutest thou me?"

The speaker said that Syria is occupied by two classes, the proper Christians, who are descendants of the Phoenicians, and who are descended from the time of the apostles. The others are the Mohammedans, the imported inhabitants. The capital of Syria is Damascus, a city of 160,000 inhabitants, 120,000 of whom are Mohammedans, who persecute the Christians. Approaching Damascus, one sees an open space which will be pointed out to the visitor as the very spot where Saul heard the voice: "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?" The street mentioned in the Acts as the street called Straight is not straight, and the Acts is careful to explain that it is merely called Straight. Mr. Mulhanna lived in Damascus near this street. He referred frequently and with bitter emphasis to the Mohammedans who conquered the country, subjected to the sword all who refused to accept their religion. The very same Islam means to conquer. The belief of the Mohammedans is that God is just to punish other nations, while His mercy is extended toward the Mohammedans. They declare that at the day of judgment the Christians headed by Christ, the Islamists by Mohammed, and so on. Each nation led by its prophet will be required to walk a narrow way like the edge of a sword. Thus in single file they will be walking toward Heaven, when suddenly there will come a cry from Heaven and all will tumble down to hell. Another sect will try it and meet the same fate. Finally only the Mohammedans will remain, and they, conducted by Mohammed, will hear a voice from Heaven crying, "O ye who follow me, a merciful God, welcome!" Their heaven will be a large garden with fruits. Their angels will be waiters to serve them with roast beef and all luxuries.

The most thrilling part of the address was the Syrian's story of the terrible massacre in Damascus twenty-six years ago. He said: "One evening my father returned home earlier than usual, and he came back with him talking seriously of a mob about to break out. He said that he was in danger of an outbreak among the Mohammedans. Next morning my brother and I, then small boys, went to school as usual. Soon we heard screaming, and the teachers came running. We emerged to find a school building to see the houses in flames. The women whose husbands, sons and brothers had been murdered by the Mohammedans had taken refuge in a house and were being burned alive. Then the mob burned the school-house. We finally made an effort to reach home, but we found the buildings on the street called Straight, through which we had to pass, on fire, and we could not get through. Back of us was the mob, in front of us the fire. A Mohammedan found us crying and bade us follow him. Many Mohammedans I recall Christian children to their houses and murdered them. We expected the same fate and refused to go. Then another Mohammedan lifted an axe dripping with blood over us as if to kill us, and we ran to the first mentioned Mohammedan, for we saw he had no weapon. He proved to be a kind man and kept us concealed nine days. Our parents and sisters had taken refuge in the castle, and I can not describe the scene when our mother learned that her boys were alive, and when the family was again united for the first time after the massacre. It was proved to be the last time. My father was out to get food for the children and was never again seen alive. My mother frantically searched for him. She asked a man if he had seen my father.
